

Consumer Duty and Ageas

We welcome the introduction of the Consumer Duty – its principles reassuringly act as a further endorsement of our ingrained customer-first culture.

The Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) requires us to be compliant with new Consumer Duty requirements for all open products by 31 July 2023. And we're pleased to say, Ageas is progressing well to meet this target.

The new Consumer Duty requirements introduce a higher standard of consumer protection across the financial services industry. This is to make sure brokers and insurers always put customers' needs first to deliver good outcomes.

We're pleased to say we've met the FCA's milestone of 30 April 2023 where we are required to share any relevant information to help you with your own readiness to be comply with Consumer Duty, as we already share our product value statements and full product outcomes. We're on track for 31 July 2023.

Our review has taken every aspect of the FCA's new Consumer Duty regulations into consideration around our relationship with brokers and customers:

Products and services

Price and value

Customer understanding

Customer support

Please, do refer to the FCA's dedicated Consumer Duty pages if you'd like to find out more about the full suite of requirements. The FCA's published policy statement can also be found here..

How we've been approaching this

The FCA is introducing a new Principle called the Consumer Duty, which is supported by a suite of requirements and cross cutting rules. Its aim is to deliver better outcomes for retail customers by promoting a customer-centric approach across the entire customer and product lifecycle and requires firms to evidence the outcomes their customers experience and take action where poor outcomes are identified.

To reflect this, here is an overview of how we've engaged with the key elements of the Consumer Duty. We've looked at:

Delivering good outcomes for retail customers

Acting in good faith

Avoiding causing foreseeable harm

Enabling retail customers to pursue their financial objectives

Delivering good outcomes for retail customers

Customers are already fundamental to the way we think at Ageas – it's how we focus on delivering brilliant service, where it matters.

We simply put them first in everything we do. But this has been a great opportunity for us to carry out a thorough and targeted review, identifying how Consumer Duty impacts our business.

- ✓ We've reviewed internal policies and governance groups to ensure the Consumer Duty is embedded at the heart of our business.
- ✓ We've begun rolling out e-learning to all our staff, bringing them up to speed on Consumer Duty and what it means for their roles.
- ✓ We've also been linking in with our suppliers to make sure they are responding to the Consumer Duty requirements.

Acting in good faith

Firms must act honestly, fairly, and professionally in the best interests of customers, so that those customers can make informed choices.

Firms must prioritise the customer's needs over their own interests, for example, avoiding using sales practices that exploit behavioural biases.

- ✓ We've been reviewing and testing parts of the customer journeys to identify any unreasonable barriers or risks of harm, in addition to identifying where there's room for improvement.
- ✓ Organisation-wide, we've been identifying high risk communications which are key to customers' decision making so that we can review and test customers' understanding

Avoiding causing foreseeable harm

The FCA require us to identify areas of potential harm for customers in the context of their insurance products, as well as premium finance arrangements. That includes vulnerable customers who may need more tailored or additional support, post-sale barriers when it comes to cancelling, switching providers, making a claim, or lodging a complaint – and fair value: we must not charge customers unreasonable fees or commissions

- ✓ We've reviewed all Ageas-owned products, including the policy wordings, to assess where any risks may be and to identify potential poor outcomes.
- ✓ We've reviewed every part of our customer experience and journey touchpoints to identify areas of potential harm.
- ✓ We've started building Management Information tools that will support our oversight of the outcomes that customers experience across the product lifecycle to help us continually learn and improve.

Enabling retail customers to pursue their financial objectives

The FCA wants firms to act to enable and support customers to pursue their financial objectives. In other words, firms need to support customers to make informed decisions about the products and services they purchase and ensure customers do not experience any unreasonable barriers (including unreasonable costs) when trying to make a change, lodge a complaint or make a claim.

- ✓ We've been building on the oversight and governance we have in place already, reviewing all controls, processes, and templates to understand if any updates are needed to improve outcomes for customers and for us to comply with the Consumer Duty requirements.
- ✓ We've launched some enhancements to the support we provide to vulnerable customers, including mandatory training to our frontline staff.
- We've also been reviewing our target market statements to ensure our products meet these and match the profile of the customers buying them.

Why this matters

The FCA's new Consumer Duty requirements create a fairer, more transparent financial services industry. Consumers will be better protected, and they'll be in a better position to make more informed decisions. In our view, there are several key benefits to the Consumer Duty's requirements:

Improved transparency and clarity

When firms communicate clearly and fairly, consumers have access to more transparent information about financial products and services. This helps them make more informed decisions and avoid products or services that aren't suitable for their needs.

Increased accountability

The principles make firms responsible for outcomes of their products and / or services. This encourages them to ensure those products and services are good quality and provide fair value to customers products or services that aren't suitable for their needs.

Greater consumer trust

By promoting a customer-centric culture and getting firms to act in their best interests, customers are more likely to have faith in our products and services. The Consumer Duty should improve consumer trust in our industry.

Reduced risk of harm

The principles aim to reduce the risk of consumer harm by providing products and services that meet customer needs and don't have unreasonable barriers to access or use. This will support customers and improve their understanding of the products they're buying - preventing consumers from inadvertently purchasing products that are unsuitable or too complex for their needs.

Consumer Duty - at a glance

Principle 12 - 'A firm must act to deliver good outcomes for retail customers'

Cross Cutting Rules Act in good faith – a standard of conduct characterised by honesty, fair and open dealing.

Avoid causing foreseeable harm – taking proactive and reactive steps to avoid causing harm that is foreseeable to customers through a firms' acts or omissions, either through direct relationships or through their role in the distribution chain.

Enable and support retail customers to pursue their financial objectives – through the design of products with customers at the heart, ensuring communications are understandable, and customers do not face unreasonable barriers during the handling of their claim or when trying or cancel or make a complaint.

outcomes to be delivered

Products and Services
The design of products and services meet the needs, characteristics and objectives of the identified target market, are appropriately distributed, and regularly reviewed.

Price and Value
The price the customer pays is reasonable compared to the overall benefits (the nature, quality and benefits the customer will experience considering all these factors).

Consumer Understanding Customers are equipped to make properly informed decisions, and are given the information they need, at the right time, and presented in a way they can understand.

Consumer Support
Customers receive an appropriate standard of support, including those with characteristics of vulnerability, and do not face any unreasonable barriers (inc.
unreasonable costs)

Monitor

Firms must assess, test, understand and be able to evidence the outcomes their customers are receiving, taking action to address poor outcomes where necessary.

Review and enhancement to existing product governance and management practices.

- Review of communications in line with design principles and standards.
- Consumer testing approach and capability

 Enhancements to customer journeys and oversight processes Review of management information to ensure it is sufficient to monitor customer outcomes.

Culture and Governance

Embedding the spirit of the Duty across our business through strategy, leadership, governance, people, and focus by risk control functions

The role we play in Consumer Duty

Co-Manufactured

Product and Service

Price and Value

Support

Ageas (Manufacturer)

- Product design and approval
- Target Market Statement
- Information on distributing the product
- Product review

Fair value assessment at product design stage, and annually thereafter.

Shared responsibility with broker co-manufacturer for the production and changes to policy literature. In addition, ensuring claims communications are understandable (where in-house)

Understanding

Ensuring the standard of support as part of the claims journey meets the needs of customers, and avoids causing foreseeable harm. If delegated, the extent of responsibilities may differ according to the contract.

Broker (Distributor)

Responsible for implementation and review of distribution arrangements aligned to the target market

Obtaining sufficient information from Ageas to ensure its distribution arrangements support fair value, and reviewed annually.

Ensuring communications are understandable to the target market through its sales and service activities.

Ensuring the standard of support as part of sales and service journeys meets the needs of customers, and avoids causing foreseeable harm.

Outcome Monitoring – In line with the activities you are responsible for, there must be sufficient governance and information in place to assess, test, understand and evidence the outcomes customers are experiencing, and take action where poor outcomes have been identified.

The role we play in Consumer Duty

Co-Manufactured

Product and Service

Price and Value

Understanding Support

Ageas (Manufacturer)

Broker

(Distributor)

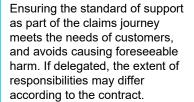

· Product design and approval

- Target Market Statement
- Information on distributing the product
- Product review

Fair value assessment at product design stage, and annually thereafter.

Obtaining sufficient information from Ageas to ensure its distribution arrangements support fair value, and reviewed annually. Shared responsibility with broker co-manufacturer for the production and changes to policy literature. In addition, ensuring claims communications are understandable (where in-house)

Ensuring communications are understandable to the target market through its sales and service activities.

Ensuring the standard of support as part of sales and service journeys meets the needs of customers, and avoids causing foreseeable harm.

Outcome Monitoring – In line with the activities you are responsible for, there must be sufficient governance and information in place to assess, test, understand and evidence the outcomes customers are experiencing, and take action where poor outcomes have been identified.

Please refer to your contract for details of your responsibilities associated with Ageas, or contact your Ageas Account Manager.

Implementation timetable

The FCA's expectations in relation to firms' implementation of the Consumer Duty's requirements:

Milestones	Deadline
Board approval of firms' implementation plan	October 2022
Review of open and existing products and services and where necessary, sharing information with the distribution chain	April 2023
Completion of the work required to be substantively compliant with the Consumer Duty	July 2023
Review of closed products and all remedial actions completed	July 2024
Completion of the first annual governing body assessment	July 2024

THANK YOU

Ageas (UK) Limited registered office: Ageas House, Hampshire Corporate Park, Templars Way, Eastleigh, Hampshire, SO53 3YA

Registered number: 1093301. Registered in England and Wales. Ageas Insurance Limited is authorised by the Prudential Regulation Authority and regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority and the Prudential Regulation Authority, Financial Services Register No. 202039.For your protection, calls may be recorded or monitored. VAT registration number: 411 5162 01

For registered UK Insurance Broker or Financial Adviser use only.

ageas | BROKER